ART. I.—UNIVERSITY EDUCATION IN IRELAND . . . 1

Mr. Balfour's declaration and the reception it has met with: a mistake for Irish Catholics to allow political considerations to warp their views on education—Past history of legislative efforts to settle the Catholic demand for an Irish University; chief reason of the failure of the Liberals in 1866, of Lord Mayo in 1868, and of Mr. Fawcett, of Mr. Gladstone in 1873—The creation of the Royal University in 1879 a greater success than its founders anticipated; yet under several heads it leaves University College and other Catholic Colleges without fair-play or justice—Important question is: What is to take its place? Our retrospect helps at least to show what will NOT satisfy legitimate Catholic demand—How far the Catholic hierarchy must exercise control—Feasibility of plan of a central chartered Catholic College—Queen's Colleges should be modified into denominational Colleges—Inconsistent position of Mr. Balfour according to his speech at Partick: what he may yet do.

ART. II.—DARWINISM 33

Attractive style and matter of Mr. Wallace's book: his excellent remarks on animal suffering quoted—Some criticisms of details: variation cannot be unlimited; the value of Mr. Wallace's instances: his credulity and imaginary hypotheses—A consideration of three principles, admitted by Mr. Wallace, any one of which is simply fatal to a mechanical conception of nature: 1. His hypothesis as to development of colour in animals; 2. As to the origin of man; 3. As to an immaterial dynamic side of bodies, on all three his statements are marvellously in accord with Catholic philosophy if a few changes of terminology be made—Mr. Wallace's is really an anti-Darwinian publication.

ART. III.—ANGLICANISM AND EARLY BRITISH CHRISTIANITY . 48

Object of this paper to test historically the identity alleged by Anglicans of the present Church of England with the Church in Britain in the sixth and earlier centuries—First test Monasticism: destruction of it by Anglicanism and denial of its spirit; list of ancient British monasteries; their convents of women; the life and dress of the ancient monk—Other tests applied: devotion to Saints and to their relics, purgatory, chrism, &c.—The early British Church and submission to Rome—Wales solicits from the Holy See the approval of her national code of laws—Attempt to disprove any recognition of papal in Britain by the forged speech of Abbot Dunawd: evidences of the forgery; who was Dunawd.

ART. IV.—THE POTATO 73

Value of the potato—Its introduction into Europe—Uncertainty as to date of its introduction into Great Britain and by whom—Slow progress of potato cultivation in these islands—Diseases, manures—Food-qualities; and best way of cooking.

ART. V.—"THE SACRIFICES OF MASSES" 85

Mr. Gore, in his recent work, "The Roman Catholic Claims," affirms that the 31st Article is aimed against the doctrine that Christ's sacrifice of Himself on the Cross was for Original sin, but his daily oblation of Himself on the altar is for Actual sins, and that this was taught by Albertus Magnus, and became current Catholic doctrine: the object of this paper is to deny this double assertion—What is Catholic doctrine and has ever been stated: and it is shown that Albertus Magnus taught this precise doctrine in the very treatise quoted by Mr. Gore for his own assertion, and also in several others of his treatises.

ART. VI.—AEROPÆDIA 95

The hitherto failure of attempts at aërial navigation not a condemnation of further efforts—Aërostation to be considered under two heads: 1. ballooning; 2. flight—History of attempts at artificial flight, the value of the study of birds, and of the principle of the screw paddle—Flying machines and gas balloons—Parachutes—Some famous ascents.

ART. VII.—MR. GLADSTONE AND BLESSED JOHN FISHER . . 111

Mr. Gladstone's honesty of purpose in what he has written on the legality of the Reformation; his patient hearing of Catholic replies shows such fairness and openness to conviction that it seems possible once for all to settle a controverted point of history—The charge brought against B. John Fisher would not help the "continuity" theory of the Church of England even if Mr. Gladstone had proved it—The passage from the Roman edition of Rishton's Sander which Mr. Gladstone relied on, not either Rishton's nor Sander's; where did the Roman editor get it? from Hilliard—Father Bridgett's proof of this; and that he does not say what Mr. Gladstone makes him say—F. Bridgett's authority for asserting that the limiting words "quantum per Christi legem licet," were proposed by Fisher, not "highly apocryphal"—Detailed replies to several points in Mr. Gladstone's second article, which required attention.

ART. VIII.—THE BALTIMORE CENTENARY 135

The close of last year marked centennial celebrations of three events marking epochs in history of humanity: Proclamation of United States Constitution, Assembly of States-General at Versailles, and Creation of United States hierarchy; a bond of connection of three events—The Church in the United States previously to the hierarchy—Its spread since; heroes of the early days: Bishop Carroll, Father Nerinckx, Prince Demetrius Gallitzin the Apostle of the Alleghanies—Councils of Baltimore and the projected Catholic University, increase of Catholic population—Miss Caldwell's munificent gift for a University, first steps taken, rapid erection of its Divinity school, its opening—Centenary celebration: future work for the Church in the States; the regeneration of Africa.

ART. I.—"JESUITS AND SECULARS IN THE REIGN OF ELIZABETH" 243

The vast majority of clergy and laity did not follow the example of the few English martyrs under Henry VIII., or the Reformation would not have taken place—Under Elizabeth the clergy failed to imitate the more faithful bishops: can any excuse be found for them?—Mr. Law says the Church went down at the first blow: not true; he forgets reigns of Henry and Edward and wrong-principled change under Mary—Why the Pope excommunicated Elizabeth and Catholics looked to a Spanish invasion: the writer's regret, as a Jesuit, that Father Persons took an active part in forwarding the latter—The spirit of the Society of Jesus as to implication in political struggles—Charge against Father Persons of uncharitable language—Regrettable dissensions between Seculars and Regulars, and different Orders of Regulars.

ART. II.—RECENT WORKS ON PRIMITIVE BUDDHISM . . 256

Life of Buddha—Is the Holy Night historical or mythical? Attempt to picture the public life of Buddha: Daily Life—Disciples: the question of caste—Buddha's attitude towards woman—His adversaries—His method of teaching—His death—General character of his doctrines: the four truths; the human soul; Nirvāna—Buddhist atheism, and Ethics.

ART. III.—THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE MASS 286

Is any of the Liturgy of Apostolical origin save the words of Institution and the Lord's Prayer? supposed authority of S. Gregory the Great for the negative—Portions of the Liturgy from Apostles; how soon were they written? not fixed and unchangeable—Influences which have moulded the Liturgies: 1. The "disciplina arcani"; 2. The early penitential discipline; 3. The relaxation of the catechumenal and penitential discipline; 4. Multiplication of "variables"; 5. Separation between East and West from the time of Constantine—Characteristics of the Oriental Liturgies considered under chief groups —An account of the oldest documents containing the Roman Mass—An historical sketch of the earliest forms of the Roman Mass.

ART. IV.—TEMPERANCE LEGISLATION 299

Remarkable re-awakening of interest in the Temperance Question—How far and how temperance legislation is useful and required—Sketch of history of drink legislation: failure of it—The Executive: licensing justices a failure—Legislation as to sale of liquors: the Sunday Closing Acts—Permissive and Local Option Bills—The Local Government Bill of '88 and Local Option—The arguments for local control of drink traffic—Have prohibition laws operated beneficially?—Chief heads of objection to repressive legislation: liberty, revenue, trade.

ART. V.—MARY, QUEEN OF ENGLAND 324

State of religion and society at Edward's death: lovers of order looked to Mary as "restorer of a popular church and honest government"—Conspiracy to prevent her accession—Her clemency to the conspirators—Her generous measures in the interests of the people: her Ministers: the acts of her first Parliament—The question of her marriage: suitors: Courtenay, Pole, Philip of Spain—Opposition to the Spanish match: insurrections —Mary's conduct to Elizabeth—Charge against her of severity to the insurgents—Her marriage.

ART. VI.—THE TYPICAL CHARACTER OF THE COVENANT SACRIFICE 342

The close parallelism between the sacrifices at Mount Sinai and on the Cross, so striking as to seem designedly typical—What is a type?—Comments on the details of the Covenant Sacrifice—Some points of detail in which the type was fulfilled in the Sacrifice of the New Law—Continuity of the latter suggested in the type—Value of analogy: instance of its practical effects in the history of the Irvingites.

ART. VII.—WERE THERE FOUR MONTHS BEFORE THE HARVEST? 351

Preliminary statement of the chronological order here followed—What time of the year was it when Christ spoke of the Harvest, Jo. iv. 35? Difficulties of supposing it was winter and the harvest four months off; the saying a proverb—Writer's opinion rests on this thesis, which it is here endeavoured to prove, that the translation of τετράμηνος by "four months," or anything equivalent to it, is impossible: the word is really an adjective denoting an accidental time relation with months—Evidence for three-month wheat: here we have four-month old; and ἔτι is to be rendered not by "yet," but "already"—The place in which Our Lord spoke.

ART. VIII.—IRISHMEN IN THE FRENCH REVOLUTION . . . 368
The Revolution began with liberation of three Irish captives—The Irish proto-martyr of the Revolution, General Theobald Dillon—Two Irish priests—The story of James Roche—Irish prisoners—Irish superiors of the Collége des Lombards and the Collége des Irlandais: dangers of the latter—Victims of the guillotine: Count Arthur Dillon—Two Irish lads—Irish sympathisers with the Revolution.

ART. IX.—CREMATION AND CHRISTIANITY 384
Universal sentiment against the desecration of human remains: Scripture authority and practice, and Early Christian—Pagan cremation—Decree of Boniface VIII. against mutilation of dead bodies—Origin of present cremationary movement: its inspiration comes from Freemason hostility to Catholicism: evidence of this—Arguments against cremation—Pronouncement of the present Holy Father against the "detestable abuse" of cremation.
